Famine in India.
Dr. Van Allen, medical missionary to Madura, South India, writes a long letter to the Scientific American, from which we quote:

The attention of the whole world is directed to the terrible famine in Russia, consequently it is not generally known that a similar scourge is afflicting India, and in this country all of the horrors which follow in the wake of starvation occur with fearful regularity every fifteen years, or twice in every generation. The last great famine was in 1876, and it was estimated by the government that fully 5,000,000 persons died of starvation and the two diseases that go with it—dysentery and famine fever. The cycle is completed again. Owing to a partial failure of rains, the fearful calamity of another famine was threatened a year ago.

This year the rains have entirely failed; however, the famine is not yet at its height, for there are districts here and there where a slender harvest is possible, which for a few weeks will announce the condition of the people who live in these favored parts. When this small supply of grain is exhausted, the famine, which is already very serious, will grip the whole nation in its withering hand, and there is no hope or help from within their borders until the next rainy season, nearly a year hence.

No one who has not seen and felt the awful desolation can realize into what a fearful condition a country is plunged by famine. No rain, crops scorched by the intense heat; tanks, whose supply of water has been depended on for irrigation, empty, and their beds baking in the blazing sun; all vegetation withered, and rivers and wells dry; the scarcity of food increasing, the price of grain rapidly rising; the people, with their gaunt, emaciated bodies, flocking by the hundreds and thousands to the relief camps established by the British government. All this misery and suffering because the blessed rain has been withheld. In many places fodder for cattle is unobtainable and the people are tearing thatches from buildings to feed the famishing animals. In other localities cattle are being killed in great numbers, as their owners are unable to feed them. And thousands and thousands have died and are dying of starvation. Every effort is made to keep a certain number alive, which must be done at all hazards, for plowing when the next seeding time comes.

How the people are to maintain themselves until the next annual rains is a most serious question, and will doubtless be answered in the usual way —a large part of the population will be supported by the government at the famine camps. There will be a bare existence of many others, and the death of thousands and even millions of people. The better class will have enough to eat, as they will import grain at enormous prices from other countries.

THE ART OF COOKING HAM.—"Do tell me just how to cook a ham," said an experienced housekeeper to a friend who was noted for her culinary knowledge. "I have looked in four cook books, and I can find nothing plain and simple enough for my Biddy to follow.
All they assume that the ham is boiled or half boiled when they proceed to treat it in more elaborate fashion, and I have not an idea how to begin even.
I have bought my ham—I know enough for that, and I know what are the best hams in the market. Now, begin and tell me just what to do with it until it is ready to serve cold on the table."

"It is very simple," said her friend, quotes the New York Tribune, "but I know it is as you say; it is just the simple, obvious knowledge that it is hardest to find written rules for. First, soak your ham all night in water, which should cover it entirely. Then set it on the fire to boil. The rule for boiling a ham is fifteen minutes to each pound, so you can easily tell by weighing it the exact length of time that will be necessary to cook it. When it is half-boiled change the water, and to the last boiling add a cupful of molasses. When it is done set it to cool, and when it is cold enough, skin it and put it in the oven to bake until the whole is nicely browned. Some people sprinkle it before putting it in the oven with brown sugar, which forms a sort of glaze.

"This is the simplest way of cooking a ham, and there is none better, in my estimation, but there are all sorts of facts about what will give it various peculiar flavors, and many are the suggestions for the last boiling. Some people cook it in champagne just at the last, others in beer, many I said had a way of covering the whole ham after it was skinned with a dough paste made of flour and water, and then putting it in the oven to bake. This, she claimed, confined all the juices to the ham, and the result she obtained was certainly delicious."
